

ARCHIVES | 1989

UPHEAVAL IN CHINA; 200,000 at Hong Kong Rally Pledge to Continue Struggle

MAY 28, 1989

About the Archive

This is a digitized version of an article from The Times's print archive, before the start of online publication in 1996. To preserve these articles as they originally appeared, The Times does not alter, edit or update them.

Occasionally the digitization process introduces transcription errors or other problems. Please send reports of such problems to archive_feedback@nytimes.com.

About 200,000 young people attended a daylong open-air pop concert in Hong Kong today to raise money for the pro-democratic demonstrations in China.

The crowd fell silent as a relayed newscast from Beijing reported the apparent triumph of hard-line leaders. "We are very disappointed," said a student, putting her head in her hands.

But organizers and performers vowed the struggle would go on.

"We are just awakening," said John Shum, a film producer.

"This is not the end, it is just the start of the movement of the whole Chinese community," said Yuen How Siu, a social worker.

When asked why they had come to the concert, two students looked slightly bewildered by the question. "Can't you see?" said one. "We are Chinese."

Halfway through the concert more than $500,000 had been raised at the event and through pledges from viewers watching on television.

A version of this article appears in print on May 28, 1989, on Page 1001016 of the National edition with the headline: UPHEAVAL IN CHINA; 200,000 at Hong Kong Rally Pledge to Continue Struggle.